	Department has been facing operational challenges, particularly in the context of talent retention. The Director requested reconsideration of the decision from a workforce stability perspective and highlighted concerns regarding exposure and security threats faced by officials, noting that CFD and EMD officials are frequently engaged in operational interface such as handling adverse record cases, managing sensitive documents, and participating in evidence seizure alongside IOs, thereby exposing them to comparable occupational risks. Members of the Committee that reviewed the professional allowance proposal clarified that the allowance had been examined holistically, in line with the Pay Revision Act 2023, and was derived based on the nature of investigative functions. These include direct or indirect involvement in fact-finding and investigations; participation in operational activities such as evidence handling, intelligence and information enrichment, interviews, search and seizure; engagement in covert or specialized investigative work; provision of essential supervisory, technical, analytical, legal, or managerial support; and exposure to occupational risks arising from interface with complainants, witnesses, suspects, or other external parties. Based on the appeal, the 3rd Commission decided that, while officials in the CFD and EMD generally have limited routine operational interface, the professional allowance shall be payable during months in which such officials are engaged in operational and interface-related functions, including assignment to investigation teams, administrative inquiries, information enrichment, or special investigative duties, irrespective of the number of such assignments. While the DoPS conveyed concerns regarding consultation prior to the decision, it was noted that the review process had provided opportunities for engagement through the Director; however, such engagement was not sustained throughout the deliberations. Further, the DoPS stated that no audit objections had previously been raised in relation to the allowance under the Pay Revision Act 2023. It was also noted that officials were not formally notified of the change in allowance entitlements and became aware of the adjustment only upon receipt of their salary.
